

For Immediate Release

News Contact:

Cynthia Greenwood

(847) 404-8404

cynthia@spicestack.com

Resolving to Get Organized in the New Year?

SpiceStack™ Offers the Perfect Home for Spices

ARLINGTON HEIGHTS, Ill. (Jan. 2, 2006) – For home cooks with a New Year’s resolution to get their kitchens organized, the new SpiceStack™ spice organizer offers an innovative alternative to old-fashioned spice racks.

“Storing and organizing spices is a major problem in most kitchens. Research shows consumer dissatisfaction with traditional spice storage units, such as the spinner rack or stairstep rack,” says Lauren Greenwood, vice president of sales and marketing for SpiceStack, Inc. “Traditional spice racks take up too much space on the counter, are difficult to organize or don’t hold enough spices. The SpiceStack solves all of these problems.”

Home cooks can locate and retrieve spices quickly and easily, while saving valuable countertop space, with SpiceStack -- a compact unit that fits in virtually any kitchen cabinet. Three pull-out, drop-down drawers make spices easy to reach. Spice bottles are stored horizontally in the drawers with the labels clearly visible. To use, simply slide the drawer out until it’s fully extended, then lower the drawer to its resting position, where it’s easy to identify and retrieve spices.

The SpiceStack requires no assembly. Four non-skid pads on the bottom of the unit hold it securely in place in the cabinet. The attractively designed unit, which measures 11 inches wide, 10 3/4 inches deep and 8 inches tall, comes in white to complement any kitchen décor. It holds up to 27 full-size or 54 half-size round spice bottles, or any combination of the two size bottles. Spices can be stored in the drawers alphabetically, by frequency of use, or by type of cooking.

The SpiceStack is manufactured in the United States. Cost is $34.95. Shipping and handling are free. To order, visit www.spicestack.com.